Qing Zhang is a graduate student in journalism in the College of Communication Arts and Sciences. She finished her undergraduate study in China with a major in English and a minor in law. She’s interested in teaching languages, and has been a Chinese (Mandarin) teacher for Hong Kong King’s College students and an English teacher for Chinese secondary school students. Right now she is focused on international journalism and cross-cultural communication. Several of her news stories discuss culture adaptation issues of Chinese students and immigrants.