Designed for language learners, these workshops are an informal way for students to learn critical skills to help them become more efficient at learning languages, while providing a forum for sharing their concerns, experiences, and insights about language learning.

While pre-registration is not required, it is much appreciated. Please e-mail celta@msu.edu with your name, language(s) you are learning, and the workshop date you plan to attend.

Understanding Proficiency and Language Expectations

Wed. February 6, 3:30-4:30pm
B-135 Wells Hall

What is language proficiency and what does my proficiency requirement mean? What is the ACTFL scale? What will my proficiency test be like? What do we know about how languages are learned, and how can it help me become a better learner? All students with a language proficiency requirement, as well as those who are interested in how language proficiency is measured, are invited to attend this workshop.

Language Learning Strategies

Fri. February 8, 1:00-2:00pm
B-135 Wells Hall

Explore your own beliefs about language learning and your personal learning style while we discuss varied strategies for becoming a better language learner, including social strategies for creating more opportunities to practice the language and technology strategies to help you study effectively. This workshop is appropriate for any and all second language learners.

Facilitators:
Anne Baker, Associate Director, Center for Language Teaching Advancement
Scott Sterling, doctoral student in Second Language Studies
